PRESS

"Songwriting with Dave is at times like having a glimpse into the minds of our great guitar swinging storytellers. His wit and sometimes cynical views are all made understandable by lyrics woven together to take the listener on a journey of life, love, and sadly, love lost. Never getting too down or self-indulgent though, Dave has a way of penning a story that is uniquely his own, but easy for all of us to relate to. I feel confident in saying that Dave is our generation's Neil Young. Witty, colorful, and sometimes, deadly serious."

"A great image-oriented lyricist and melodic tunesmith! Dave Armo's music has a refreshingly positive vibe to it—and we need it now more than ever."

"Late Night Conversations" is the end result of Dave Armo's nearly two year run in the studio. The project began with words and music Dave began writing in the late hours of the night. Seeking to further himself in his music career, Dave enlisted recording engineer and Bay Area singer/songwriter Jeff Rolka to record a three song demo. A short time later, Jeff introduced Dave to Andrew Griffin - a Bay Area musician and producer. Together Jeff and Andrew began working as a production team for Dave's music. Dave, who did not have a band, was soon fortunate enough to find that a studio band was already set in stone: Dave would play guitar, harmonica, and vocals with Jeff on bass and Andrew on drums. Tapping into Andrew's network of San Francisco musician friends, Dave would enlist Rich McCulley (guitar, mandolin), Gaby Alter (keyboards) and Jordan Feinstein (keyboards) to round out a full rock sound.

A record with both folk and sometimes country-feel rock songs, along with personal ballads "Late Night Conversations" is a collection of memories of a diverse group of Bay Area musicians and writers all performing together. Packed with instrumentation, rich with harmonies, and written from and for the heart, the album promises to add something different to your ears upon each listen.
